

Atlantic Capital

Atlanta's Hometown Business Bank

What the Merger Means for Atlantic Capital - And Why We're Not Going Anywhere

The merger between BB&T and SunTrust Banks has made Atlantic Capital the only publicly traded bank with assets over $1 billion now headquartered in the city of Atlanta.

With the as-yet-unnamed partnership relocating to a combined base of operations in Charlotte, Atlantic Capital is currently in a position to further expand its already growing portfolio of business relationships within the Atlanta area.

Since its founding in 2007, Atlantic Capital has prided itself on its connection to both the city of Atlanta and the state of Georgia as a whole, with CEO Doug Williams maintaining a consistent presence in the community and Chairman Sonny Deriso having recently been named Chairman of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce.

Our commitment to providing small and midsize businesses and their owners with responsive, growth-oriented solutions means that our relationships are important to us. Our bankers build the trust of our clients over time.

We also believe that the business we do has the potential to bring lasting benefit to the community we share. In this way, we're investing in the city of Atlanta itself. Our city is vital to the core of who we are.

At Atlantic Capital, we partner with businesses across the country to help them achieve the prosperity their hard work deserves. But while we will continue to foster new growth nationwide, our home is, and always will be, Atlanta.
